

41st INFANTRY DIVISION, 1943-1945

19,600 pages (approximate)

Boxes 960-984

The 41st Infantry Division, nicknamed the “Jungleers” and previously called the Sunset Division, was activated on September 16, 1940 from the National Guard Division of Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Washington, and Wyoming. It served in the Pacific theatre during the Second World War and participated in the New Guinea, Southern Philippines, and Papuan campaigns. The Division also served on occupation duty for a brief period of time but only rarely throughout the war did it operate as a complete unit. Its three infantry regiments (162nd, 163rd, and 186th), supported by other organic elements, were most often detached on separate operations and in many cases took on the designation of a specified task force. In order to clarify confusion and necessarily arises from such operational and organizational complexity, an attempt has been made in the chronology section to document the assignment and designation changes for the three regiments.

The bulk of the collection is made up of histories, operations reports and separate journal and periodic report files. In addition the collection contains a large number of maps, overlays, and photographs. The maps detail areas of New Guinea, Southern Philippines, and Japan. A good portion of the photographs are aerial views. Both maps and photographs are fairly well scattered throughout the collection as are a small number of documents originated by the Australian forces, mostly in material related to the Papuan and New Guinea campaigns.

Documentation of the unit’s history varies considerably from period to period. The first document in the series provides an overview of the time period, 1941-1945, but other than that there is no record of the Division’s stateside duty and only a few items related to the training periods in Australia. Little is available on the Papuan campaign—units of the 41st were ordered to participate only in the closing months of the operation. The series contains a significant coverage of the unit’s involvement in the Southern Philippine campaign and spot coverage of the operations conducted in New Guinea. In the latter instance, emphasis is on Biak, Hurricane Task Force, and Letterpress Landing Force. There is also substantial material related to the period of occupation duty.

The series consists primarily of routine documentation of unit operations, but there are four subject areas worthy of mention: (1) supply and transportation, (2) the use of native labor, (3) cooperation and interaction with allied troops, in particular Australian forces, and (4) the Japanese reaction to occupation. Documents related to these subjects are not confined to any one portion of the series. The Container List would be the best guide to their locations. The problems mentioned in an earlier paragraph concerning the unit’s complex organizational and operational history take on practical significance when it comes to arrangement of records. Without a definitive way of modifying the classification scheme set up by the Departmental Records Branch the necessity for some subjective application of the guidelines and the placing of certain task force reports in with Staff Section material.

Chronology
41st Infantry Division

- December 7, 1943 When the attack was made upon Pearl Harbor the 41st was organized as a square division at Fort Lewis, Washington under the command of Major General Horace M. Fuller. Shortly thereafter the division took up defense positions along the Pacific coast with headquarters in Olympia, Washington. The division remained on this duty until Feb.15, 1942
- February 15, 1942 Reorganized as a triangular division and reassembled at Fort Lewis, Washington.
- February 19, 1942 The 162nd Infantry Regiment with the 641st Tank Destroyer Battalion departed for New York City for further deployment overseas.
- March 17, 1942 The division less the 186th Infantry, Division Artillery Headquarters, 146th Field Artillery Battalion, 205th Field Artillery Battalion, and the 218th Field Artillery Battalion was directed to proceed to San Francisco for overseas shipment.
- April 10, 1942 San Francisco component of the division arrived in Melbourne, Australia. Two days later the contingent departing from New York arrived and all troops moved to Seymour where training commenced.
- May 1942 Reminder of the division arrived.
- July 4, 1942 Orders were received to move from Seymour, Victoria to Rockhampton, Queensland. The latter better lent itself to jungle training.
- December 1942 The 163rd Infantry, less the artillery and under the command of Colonel Jens A. Doe was ordered to participate in the New Guinea campaign. Shortly thereafter the remainder of the 41st was ordered to New Guinea
- January 26, 1943 The 41st was put under the command of New Guinea Force Headquarters and remained until October 5, 1943
- March 1943 A task force made up of several units from the 41st and under the direction of Colonel Archibald McKenchnie began a land and water drive to seize Morobe.
- June 1943 McKenchnie's force, augmented by other units, participated in an amphibious landing at Nassau Bay.
- July 1943 The 41st, less those engaged in the Salamaua operation, returned to Rockhampton, Australia for recuperation. Salamaua troops arrived later.
- December 1942 Division took amphibious training at Toorbul Point, Australia.
- March-April 1944 The 163rd Infantry along with auxiliary units was organized under the command of Brigadier General Jens A. Doe and assigned a mission against Aitape, New Guinea as Persecution Task Force. The remainder of the Division, designated Letterpress Landing Force participated in the Hollandia-Tanamura Bay operation.

May 1944	The 163rd Infantry was designated as the Tornado Landing Force and directed to land at Toem, Dutch new Guinea. The remainder of the 41st, designated as the Hurricane Task Force, landed at Biak. Late in the month the Tornado Landing Force rejoined the 41st in the Biak operation
June 18, 1944	General Horace H. Fuller relinquished command of the division to Brigadier General Jens. A. Doe.
August 20, 1944	Termination of Biak operation.
January 2, 1945	Orders were receiver to prepare for movement to Luzon, Philippine Islands.
February 1945	Destination of Division was revised. All units bivouacked in preparation for the V-3 (Palawa and V-4 (Zamboanga – Sulu Archipelago) operations.
February 28, 1945	The Palawan Force (186th Infantry) landed near the town of Puerto Princessa.
March 10, 1945	The remainder of the 41st landed on the Zamboanga Peninsula.
May 3, 1945	The 162 Infantry departed Zamboanga for assignment to the V-5 (Cotabe-Parang-Malabang) operation.
May 7, 1945	The 3rd Battalion, 163rd Infantry was ordered to the V-5 operation.
September 1945	Commenced occupation duty in Japan.
December 31, 1945	Inactivated in Japan.

DESCRIPTION OF SUBSERIES

Container Nos.	Subseries
960	I. GENERAL HISTORICAL AND OPERATIONAL REPORTS. 1941-1945 3/4 container Mostly narrative material and operations reports but also miscellaneous items that did not fit logically into another subseries. Very little documentation after mid-1944, with a substantial amount related to the early New Guinea period. The most extensive grouping of material related to Tornado Task Force can be found in this subseries.
961-961	II. G-1 REPORTS. 1943-1945. 1-1/4 containers Reports are primarily comprised of supporting Documents with little narrative material. The few histories contained in this subseries provide some documentation of administrative procedures. Little material dates earlier than 1945.
962-969	III. G-2 REPORTS. 1943-1945. 7-3/4 containers Contains a mixture of narrative reports and supporting documents. Many of the histories include maps and aerial photographs. Coverage of early operations is limited but beginning with the Biak operation documentation is much more complete. Of special interest is the almost complete collection of the Division's information and education bulletin "Front Lines."
969-973	IV. G-3 REPORTS. 1943-1945. 4-1/4 containers Periodic reports, situation reports and field order dominate this subseries. Documentation is heaviest for 1945 with some 1944 material and still less related to 1943 operations. A series of miscellaneous G-3 reports contains special reports related to employment of tactics and weaponry in jungle warfare.
974	V. G-4 REPORTS. 1942-1945. 1 container. Histories are almost entirely narrative. Documentation of G-4 activities is quite uneven but, unlike the other subseries, there is a heavy concentration of material dating from 1943. See the container list for notes regarding topical coverage.
975-984	VI. STAFF SECTIONS. 1943-1945. 9-1/2 containers. This subseries contains substantial documentation for 1943 as well material related to some of the operations not extensively documented elsewhere, e.g. Salamaua Campaign and V-3 Operation. Reports filed by the task forces can be found in this subseries. Section histories vary from simple narrative accounts to highly documented reports with periodic reports, journals, and journal files. See Container List for additional notes regarding individual files.

42nd INFANTRY DIVISION, 1943-1946

3,500 pages (approximate)

Boxes 986-990

The "Rainbow Division" had a rather brief period of activity in the European Theater during World War II. Although it was activated in 1943, advance elements of the Division did not arrive in Europe until December 1944. These advanced elements arrive in Europe until December 1944. These advance elements were formed into a Task Force Linden and were engaged in defensive activities along the Rhine River near Strasbourg. The rest of the Division arrived in January 1945, but did not go on the offensive until March. The Division participated in the Rhineland and Central Europe campaigns, and was crossing the Austrian border north of Salzburg when the war ended on May 5, 1945. One of the most noted actions of the Division was the liberation of 30,000 inmates of the Dachau concentration camp.

The series contains historical reports, periodic reports, memos and journals. The material covers the period from 1943 to 1946, although the bulk of the records date from 1945 and 1946. The material is organized into three subseries according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch, and chronologically thereunder.

The bulk of the General Historical and Operational Reports consists of the War Room Journal. This journal, which makes up roughly half of the entire series, was apparently kept at the Division headquarters. It recorded the hour-by-hour activities of the Division, and contains both G-2 (intelligence) and G-3 (operations) information. Most of the General Staff Section Reports concern intelligence matters. The most interesting records detail the activities of the T Force. This Force was a team of intelligence experts whose duty was to visit factories, offices, and other places of interest as soon as possible after they had been occupied by the Division, in order to confiscate and analyze documents and other intelligence items. The Special Staff Section Reports contain information on various organizational components of the Division. Probably the most interesting of these is the Judge Advocate. The Judge Advocate had to cooperate with the Austrian Military Government in preparing for the trials of was criminals in Salzburg in 1946. Among the records is a large report on the preparation of the courtroom where the trials were held.

Box 1019

The 44th Infantry Division was activated in 1940, but did not see combat until after landing in France in the fall of 1944. The Division served in the Rhineland campaign and later participated in the Allied drive to the Alps in the Central European Campaign. After the war it served a brief occupation duty in Austria until being sent back to the United States.

The series contains mostly historical and after action reports, dating from October 1944 to June 1945. A few items are dated as late as November 1945 and as early as 1942. The series is organized according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch, and chronologically thereunder.

The "Thunderbird Division" was activated in 1940 and spent its first two years training in the United States. In June 1943 the Division was sent to North Africa and participated in the invasion of Sicily the following month. In September 1943 the Division invaded Italy where it spent almost a year of bitter fighting in the mountains of central Italy and at the Anzio beachhead. In August 1944 the Division participated in the invasion of Southern France, fighting northward along the Rhine Valley to the Vosges Mountains and then turned eastward toward Germany. In 1945 the Division crossed southern Germany to capture Munich and was stationed near Dachau at the end of the war.

This series contains histories, periodic reports and journals describing the activities of the Division. Most of the material covers the period from July 1943 to May 1945 when the Division was in combat. The material is arranged into the subseries according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch, and chronologically thereunder.

The first subseries consists of records describing the activities of the entire Division. Included in this subseries is a printed booklet titled The 45th. It was published by the Division at the end of the war and gives a brief summary of the history of the Division. The monthly histories for September and October 1943 contain detailed maps showing the daily positions of the Division in southern Italy.

The next four subseries contain the records of the Division's general staff. Of particular interest are the G-4 histories which contain detailed lists of the amount and type of equipment and supplies used by the Division in combat.

The last subseries pertains to the special staff sections of the Division. The activities of most of the staff sections are well documented for the period when the Division was in France and Germany. Of particular interest are the Activities reports of the Special Service office. These provide a detailed account of the entertainment and recreation facilities available to the men of the Division during times of combat. One item in this subseries was the Division during times of combat. One item in this subseries was compiled during the spring of 1951. This was an S-1 Journal of the Placement Company, and gives information on the activities of the Division in the United States before being sent to Korea.

63rd Infantry Division. 1943-1945.

Boxes 1033-1037

The 63rd Infantry Division was activated on June 15th, 1943. Elements of "Blood and Fire" protected the east flank of the Seventh Army along the Rhine River in December, 1944. The rest of the Division joined up with the advance elements on February 6th, 1945. The Division participated in the Rhineland and Central Europe campaigns. After reaching the Danube and capturing Leipheim, the Division was withdrawn from the line and assigned to security duty in the area between the Rhine River and Darmstadt. The 63rd began leaving for home on August 21, 1945, and was inactivated on September 27, 1945

The series is divided into seven subseries; however, the majority of the material is contained in the staff section subseries. This subseries is entirely composed of monthly unit histories covering the activities of each section from February to August, 1945. The G-5 subseries contains the periodic reports of the military governments of several units and detachments in Germany, Belgium, and Luxembourg.

The material in this series is arranged according to the classification system of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically thereunder.

Boxes 1037-1038

The 65th Infantry Division, nicknamed "Battle Axe", was activated on August 16, 1943. The Division landed at Le Havre, France, on January 21, 1945, and proceeded to Camp Lucky Strike, where training continued until March, 1945 when the Division relieved the 26th Infantry Division. The 65th took over the aggressive defense along the Saar River on March 8, 1945, and on the 17th it crossed the river just as the Siegfried Line defenses cracked. On March 30, the 65th crossed the Rhine and ran into heavy German resistance. Continuing its advance, the Division crossed the Danube on April 26, 1945, and occupied Linz, Austria on May 5. On May 9, as hostilities ended, the troops of the 65th made contact with the Russians at Erlauf. The Division received credit for participating in the Rhineland and Central Europe campaigns.

The series contains detailed historical material concerning the activities of the 65th Infantry Division,, including biographical sketches of the general officers and a pamphlet "Right to Be Proud". The series also contains after action reports, G-2 reports, and a scrapbook concerning the history of the Division Artillery unit.

The material in the series is arranged according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically thereunder.

The "Black Panther" Division was activated on April 15, 1943. After training in England, the Division was crossing the channel on December 24, 1944, when a German torpedo ripped into the transport, killing 14 officers and 748 enlisted men. The 66th was attached to the 12th Army Group for action in the Northern France campaign. The Division was designated the 12th Army Group Coastal Sector, and, with operational control of the French forces in the area, the 66th relieved the 94th Division in the Brittany-Loire area on December 29, 1944. Its mission was to contain the enemy in the St. Nazaire and Lorient pockets. In April, 1945, a heavy German attack was repulsed near La Croix, and several strong enemy positions were taken. Enemy troops in the St. Nazaire and Lorient pockets surrendered to the Division on May 8, 1945. The 66th took up occupational duty near Koblenz until May 26, when it left for Marseilles. The division sailed for home on October 27, 1945.

The series is divided into five subseries, and is arranged according to the Departmental Records Branch classification scheme. The majority of the material in the series is contained in the G-4 subseries, most of which covers training exercises in 1944. Of special interest are the G-2 and G-3 reports. The G-2 reports contain POWs' opinions of Hitler and his plans, and the eyewitness account of the concentration camp at Buchenwald. The G-3 after action reports contain detailed plans and accounts of the surrender of the German forces at St. Nazaire and Lorient. The Staff Section Subseries consists of the Adjutant General's File, and is mostly troop assignments and attachment orders.

The "Fighting Sixty-Ninth Division" was activated in May 1943 and spent over a year in training at Camp Shelby, Mississippi. In January 1945 the Division landed in Europe where it participated in the Rhineland and Central Europe campaigns. After the war ended the Division was on occupation duty for four months until being sent home in September 1945.

This series consists of histories, reports, journals and orders. The bulk of the material covers the period from February to August 1945 when the Division was in combat and on occupation duty. There are a few records describing the Division's activities prior to arrival in Europe. The records are arranged according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically thereunder.

Most of the series consists of G-2 and G-3 reports and journals. These provide a detailed, day-by-day account of the operations of the Division. Many of the records from April and May contain information on contacts between American and Russian Troops. The activities of the various special staff sections are poorly documented. Of particular interest is a published pamphlet containing a history of the 273rd Infantry Regiment during its tour of duty in Europe.

The "Red Circle Division" was activated on July 15, 1943, and arrived in France on February 6, 1945. The Division saw 62 days of combat in the Rhineland and Central Europe campaigns before serving lengthy occupation duty in Augsburg, Germany.

The series contains periodic reports, journals, administrative and operational instructions, PW reports, medical reports, and news clippings. The material is organized into six subseries according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically thereunder.

Although the Division was activated in 1943, the vast majority of material deals with the 1945 engagements and occupational operations continuing into 1946. G-2 journals from May 1 to December 31, 1945, and periodic reports (G-2 and G-3) from March to May, 1945, are included. Of particular interest are PW journals from November to December, 1945, and copies of the Red Circle News File, the 71st Division's newspaper, from August to September, 1945, in the General Historical Reports Subseries.

CHRONOLOGY
