SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Papers of John A. McCone fall entirely within the years 1958 to 1961 when McCone served as Chairman of the United States Atomic Energy Commission.

John A. McCone was born in San Francisco, California in 1902. After graduating from the College of Engineering, University of California, Berkeley in 1922 he began his long career as a riveter and boiler-maker for the Llewellyn Iron Works in Los Angeles. He eventually became superintendent of this company. In 1937, after holding various executive positions with Consolidated Steel Corporation, he organized his own firm, Bechtel-McCone, a major designer and producer of petroleum refineries and power plants throughout the United States and other parts of the world.

In World War II McCone became President and Director of the California Shipping Corporation. After the war he took over the Joshua Hendy Iron Works and served as director and then chairman until 1969 when he became chairman of Hendy International Company.

McCone saw his first federal government service as a member of President Truman's Air Policy Commission in 1947. His work on this commission focused on military aspects of air policy. In 1948 he served as a special deputy to Secretary of Defense James Forrestal and in 1950 and 1951 held the post of Under Secretary of the Air Force. At that time he urged President Truman to establish an embryonic missile program under an individual with firm control over the effort. This proposal later earned McCone praise from the New York Herald Tribune as "a prophet with honor."

McCone first met General Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1947, beginning a long and close personal relationship. As a member of the Air Policy Commission, McCone discussed military aircraft problems with General Eisenhower. Later, as Under secretary of the Air Force, McCone assisted in obtaining high ranking Air Force officers for General Eisenhower's SHAPE staff, including General Lauris Norstad. McCone also discussed a nuclear capability for NATO with General Eisenhower.

When Eisenhower became President he offered McCone the position of Secretary of the Air Force. McCone did not accept this offer but in 1954 did serve as a member of the Wriston Commission which recommended certain reforms of the United States Foreign Service.

In 1958 McCone was offered and accepted the chairmanship of the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC). As Chairman of the AEC McCone devoted much time to grappling with problems associated with nuclear testing and, specifically, trying to negotiate a nuclear test ban treaty with the Soviet Union. McCone opposed the moratorium on atmospheric tests imposed by President Eisenhower in 1958 in the absence of a treaty. He saw his responsibility as Chairman of the AEC as being to oversee the development of weapons as sophisticated as necessary for military use and believed that the test moratorium would retard this development. He strongly believed in writing into any treaty with the Soviets firm provisions for verification and inspection to safeguard against covert testing. Although representatives of the United States, the Soviet Union, and the United Kingdom conducted nuclear test negotiations at Geneva, Switzerland throughout most of McCone's tenure as Chairman, the negotiations foundered largely on the issue of inspection and no treaty on atmospheric testing was signed until 1963.

When McCone became Chairman of the AEC he inherited a bad relationship between certain members of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy and his predecessor, Lewis Strauss. McCone tried to improve working relations with the Committee and adopted a policy of providing intelligence briefings on Soviet nuclear capabilities to the Committee. Other issues with which McCone dealt as Chairman included the question of public versus private power, cooperation with foreign countries on peaceful uses of atomic energy, and the safety of nuclear power facilities. On occasion the President sought McCone's advice on matters other than atomic energy, such as the space budget. McCone regularly attended National Security Council and Cabinet meetings.

McCone's government service did not end when President Eisenhower left office in 1961. Later that year President John F. Kennedy picked him as Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, a post which he held until 1965 when he returned to private business.

The Papers of John A. McCone pertain almost exclusively to his activities as Chairman, Atomic Energy Commission, from July 14, 1958, to January 20, 1961. (The papers contain a few items created in the weeks immediately prior to his becoming Chairman.) The material is from McCone's Office Files, a 34 cubic foot segment of the records of the Department of Energy. These papers were withdrawn from the McCone Office Files by the Department of Energy's historian at Mr. McCone's request and sent to the Eisenhower Library because they document his role as an advisor to President Eisenhower.

These papers were selected from six different series within McCone's Office Files. The Department of Energy's series and file folder arrangement has been retained by the Library staff. Most of the series are arranged chronologically with some alphabetical and functional organization. While McCone was Chairman of the AEC, his office files were split into an "H" Street (Washington, D.C.) Section and a Germantown (main AEC headquarters) Section. Copies of all documents going into the Chairman's Office Files were intended to be placed in each set of files although this was not always done. The selection of materials from both section for shipment to the Eisenhower Library resulted in some duplication. Documents marked "DC File" are from the Washington D.C. section and those marked "GT" are from the Germantown file. Where feasible, file folders have been annotated to indicate the respective sections but several folders contain documents from both Washington, D.C. and Germantown.

In most cases only selected documents from the original file folders were sent to the Eisenhower Library. Only the folders entitled "O&M 12--Cooperation, Coordination and Liaison-White House," the "Testing" folders, and the folders entitled "McCone Sealed File" contain every document that the Office file in Washington holds with the exception of the items noted below.

The cross reference sheets found in many of the folders indicate that certain documents were originally designated for transfer to the Eisenhower Library but were retained at the Department of Energy when it was determined that the documents contained information relating to design, utilization, or manufacture of nuclear weapons. Requests for access to these or any other documents in the McCone Office Files in Washington should be directed to the Historian's Office, Department of Energy, Washington, D.C. 20545.

Nuclear testing is the topic most thoroughly documented in these papers. Types of documentation include McCone's memos and notes, memoranda of conferences with the President, reports, working papers, and several memoranda of conferences of the Committee of Principals. Some of this material includes studies, reports, and correspondence reflecting the views of the President's science advisers, Dr. James R. Killian and Dr. George B. Kistiakowsky, and members of the President's Science Advisory Committee.

Other topics covered in varying degrees of detail include high energy physics, international atomic energy matters, potential hazards of nuclear reactors, the Paris summit conference and the U-2 incident, Soviet atomic energy programs, and the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy. Attached as an appendix is a select listing of names of individuals and negotiating bodies which frequently appear in these papers.

The papers of John A. McCone should be examined in conjunction with other collections in the Library's holding which also contain documentation on the role of McCone as a presidential advisor and the Administration's policy on nuclear weapons and atomic energy matters. Other collections containing information related to that found in these papers include Dwight D. Eisenhower's Papers as President of the United States (Ann Whitman File), the Records of the White House Staff Secretary, the Records of the Office of the Special Assistant for Science and Technology, and the Records of the President's Science Advisory Committee.

Approximately 40% of the material in these papers was removed because of security classification and placed in the Library's vault when the collection was processed. Scholars may request mandatory declassification reviews of security classified documents in these papers under the provisions of Executive Order 12356.
