The papers of Maxwell M. Rabb, counsel to the President and secretary to the Cabinet, were deposited in the Eisenhower Library in 2002 by Mrs. Ruth Rabb, his widow.

Linear feet shelf space occupied: 24
Approximate number of pages: 47,200
Approximate number of items: 15,000

In May 2003 Mrs. Rabb executed a deed of gift for these papers.

By agreement with the donor the following classes of documents will be withheld from research use:

1. Papers and other historical materials the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy of a living person.
2. Papers and other historical materials that are specifically authorized under criteria established by statute or Executive Order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy, and are in fact properly classified pursuant to such statute or Executive Order.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Maxwell M. Rabb Papers document his early career as a lawyer and administrative assistant to Senator Henry Cabot Lodge as well as his role in the 1952 presidential campaign and the Eisenhower Administration. The papers have been divided into two series. The first one concerns his career from 1936 to 1952, and the second covers his service during the Eisenhower presidency, 1953-58.

Rabb got involved in the Eisenhower for President campaign in late 1951 and worked full-time for the campaign in 1952. In January 1953 he joined the White House staff as aide to Sherman Adams and counsel to the President, and in 1954 he became secretary to the Cabinet, a position he held until he resigned in 1958. Throughout all his time in the White House, Rabb was viewed as the staff member in charge of minority affairs. Correspondence, reports, and printed materials involving Jewish issues, African-Americans, civil rights, segregation, integration, anti-Semitism, refugees, and immigration were often referred to Rabb.

The first series contains some campaign files which appear to have originated with George Rabb, Maxwell Rabb's brother. These concern state and local campaigns in Massachusetts from 1938 to 1942.

Rabb's Papers document early meetings of Eisenhower supporters in November-December 1951, as they worked to build an organization, raise funds, and plan strategy for the primaries. There are considerable materials on the primary campaigns and Rabb's role in this effort. Throughout the campaign, Rabb's files reflect his interests in minority issues, such as discrimination, fair employment, and civil rights, as well as U.S. policies toward Israel, and the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act. Documentation includes correspondence, plans, notes on strategy, clippings, political ads, posters, and reports.

Henry Cabot Lodge's 1952 senatorial campaign is well-documented in the first series. The files offer some evaluation and analysis as to the reasons why he lost to John F. Kennedy.

The second series begins with files on the Cabinet meetings Rabb attended. These files contain some materials available in other collections, such as agenda, records of action, and Cabinet Papers, but the unique materials in the files are Rabb's personal notes on the Cabinet meetings, which include fascinating candid quotes by President Eisenhower on various issues and people. When discussing oil imports he suggested "shooting Paul Getty," and during a discussion on financial matters he referred to the "confounded banks."

The correspondence subseries in the second series of Rabb's Papers reflects his broad interests as well as his duties and role in the Eisenhower White House. There is considerable correspondence with Jewish leaders and Zionist organizations on the subjects of Israel, anti-Semitism, and McCarthyism. Correspondence with African-American leaders, such as Adam Clayton Powell, Walter White, Roy Wilkins, Val Washington, Albert M. Cole, and E. Frederic Morrow covers such subjects as Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education, the Emmett Till lynching, integration, desegregation in Washington, D.C., voting rights, and fair housing. Other subjects he addresses in his correspondence include immigration, refugees, the Virgin Islands, Indian policy, the United Nations, patronage, “hate” literature, and the 1955 Geneva Conference. He corresponded with Henry Cabot Lodge, Scott McLeod, Richard Nixon, family members, George Meany, Jane M. Spaulding, Norman Thomas, and Walter Winchell.

The subject subseries contains a large sampling of far-right, “hate” literature from the 1950s. These publications express views that are generally anti-Jewish, anti-Black, anti-Catholic, anti-Communist, anti-integration, and pro-McCarthy. A few of the articles personally attacked Rabb as “an ADL agent” and part of a Jewish conspiracy to control the government. Civil rights, a bipartisan civil rights commission, housing, immigration, the Black vote, Israel, the President’s Committee on Government Contracts, integration of Naval and Veterans Administration facilities, and Zionism are some of the subjects discussed in this subseries. The work of the NAACP, the National Urban League, the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, and B’nai B’rith are reflected in the second series of Rabb’s Papers as well.

Materials relating to civil rights, about 7,000 pages, were spot-reviewed and copies were opened to research in 2006.

Rabb’s Papers have seventy-two pages of classified materials. Thirty-four pages have been closed under the donor’s deed of gift as well as privacy considerations. Eighteen pages have been transferred to the Preservation File. Eighteen items have been transferred to the museum, and ninety-two items have been sent to the audiovisual collection.

Studying the Rabb Papers is a must for anyone interested in civil rights or minority affairs during the 1950s. This collection will be a good source for anyone researching the 1952 campaign, particularly the early primary effort. Rabb’s collection of far right, “hate” literature will also serve as an excellent resource for historians studying the development of right-wing, neo-fascist organizations. Rabb’s recording of candid comments by the President on various issues and individuals at Cabinet meetings is also a valuable resource for researchers working on a variety of topics.
